The FDA governs food labeling for all foods and food products except meat, poultry, and processed egg products.

Generally, all food products must bear a nutritional label unless the person selling them sells less than 100,000 items a year, employs less than 100 full-time employees, and has gross sales of less than $500,000 a year.